

Oral Exam Task: Conversation about Input and Output Devices

Instructions: Prepare a conversation in which you discuss with a partner the choice of input and output devices for different daily tasks, such as studying, working, or personal activities. Use appropriate vocabulary and organize your ideas clearly to explain your recommendations and preferences.

Activity Context

Imagine one of you needs to buy some tech devices for a home workspace and is asking the other for recommendations. Your conversation should include a discussion about different input and output devices, why you would choose them, and how they could be useful.

Suggested Structure

1. Introduction:

- Start by greeting your partner and briefly introducing the purpose of the conversation.
- For example: "Hi! I'm setting up my home workspace, and I could use some advice on input and output devices. Do you have any recommendations?"

2. Discuss Input Devices:

- Talk about input devices like keyboards, mice, microphones, and scanners.
- Give suggestions on what might be useful based on the tasks. For example:
 - "If you'll be typing a lot, a high-quality keyboard can make a big difference."
 - "A separate microphone might be a good investment if you have frequent video calls."

3. Discuss Output Devices:

- Move on to output devices such as monitors, printers, and speakers.
- Describe what each device could add to the workspace. For example:
 - "A large monitor helps with multitasking, especially if you work with documents or presentations."
 - "A multifunction printer might be useful if you need to scan, copy, or print regularly."

4. Preferences and Final Recommendations:

- Share your personal preferences or experiences with certain devices and why you like them.
- For example: "I personally prefer using a mechanical keyboard for typing. It's more comfortable for long hours."
- Wrap up the conversation with a few final recommendations.

5. Conclusion:

- End the conversation by thanking each other for the advice or sharing final thoughts.
 - For example: “Thanks for the tips! I think I’ll go with a new monitor and maybe a microphone too.”
